Chilkoot Pass, Alaska [View from the Scales of a line of men climbing the Golden Staircase up the Chilkoot Trail and men going over the nearby Peterson Trail. Men and supplies in the foreground. "Meadville, Pa., New York, N.Y., Portland, Oregon, London, Eng., Sydney, Aus." along right margin. Descriptive text on back reads "9195 - Preparing to Climb "The Golden Stair" and Peterson's Trail, Chilkoot Pass. The difficulty of crossing lofty mountain ranges gives great importance to notches or passes in their tops through which travel and traffic may go with less effort than over their crests. The heavy snows may close the passes for several months each year. When railroads are built over mountain ranges they invariably cross by some pass and often avoid the last climb by tunneling. The Chilkoot Pass shown here is a splendid example. The picture has an historical value also for it shows the rush to the Alaskan gold fields. During the years 1897 and 1898, 40,000 men entered the Klondike region. They went by various routes, but very many followed the old Indian trail over Chilkoot Pass which was open most of the year. Everything they wished to have had to be carried on the back or dragged on sleds and this added incredible hardship and danger to the trip. Here you see the gold seekers resting and preparing for the final climb. Each man guarded his possessions for they could not be replaced if lost. The Chilkoot Pass is now almost abandoned, as steamers ply on the Yukon and a railroad runs into the interior through White Pass. Copyright 1909, by Keystone View Company." 78/69 #2 and 78/69 #3 are the same image.] - [1897-1898]. -

The name Frosty has not been given him on account of his disposition, which, like that of all dogs of his breed, is extremely amiable. It has been given him on account of his color, and a more suitable name could hardly have been found. Frosty's remote forbears were savage animals, half-domesticated wolves who hunted with their masters and shared with them the spoils of the chase. No trace of their ferocity exists in the handsome animal before us, accustomed from puppyhood to the hand and touch of man. He leads a pampered existence in comparison with that of Husky dogs owned by Indian or prospector, for the latter have to draw heavy sleds over the trackless snows of Alaska no matter how bitterly cold the weather. The automobile to our left is the one that carried President Harding for so many miles during his inspection of the Territory in the summer of 1923. He spent a fortnight in Alaska and talked with all sorts and conditions of men in order to discover the cause of the set-back which that land of immense prospective resources experienced after the World War. He was welcomed everywhere with enthusiasm and on numerous occasions was called upon to perform formal functions, such for instance as that of driving a golden spike at

At right "Meadville, PA., New York, N.Y., Chicago, Ill., London, England."] [Descriptive text on back reads "Visiting A Fox Farm, Carcross, Yukon Territory. These boys are having the time of their lives - all children love animals, but fancy having a half-wild fox eat out of one's hand! See how intent the boys are; how careful not to make any sudden move to alarm the fox, which, half afraid, eager to get the tidbit, yet fearing these strange humans, stands on tiptoe, ready to flee at the first hostile movement. Foxes are naturally timid and shy, and usually give man a wide berth. But born in captivity, as these have been, raised in the constant presence of man, fed daily by his hand, they become as tame as dogs. Although meat is their principal diet they will eat anything a dog will eat, and become quite fond of bread and milk. The silver fox is said to be the most valuable fur-bearing animal in the world. As much as $2500 has been paid for a single pelt. In view of this it is not surprising that enterprising men have undertaken to raise foxes instead of depending upon hunters and trappers for their pelts. Hundreds of fox ranches have been established in the neighborhood of the Great Lakes and in Alaska and British Columbia. In Michigan alone there are said to be more than five thousand foxes on fox farms at the present time, and their value runs up into the millions, for unbelievable sums are sometimes paid for a single pair of breeding stock. Pelts bred in the Northwest Territory are somewhat heavier and coarser than those of the Great Lakes, owing to the difference in climate, and they range in price from $400 to $1000. One is struck by the neat appearance and the attractive and intelligent features of these children of a vanishing race, and by the pleasing appearance of the building in which they attend school. This school building is freshly painted and in perfect repair, remarkable under the conditions, for Carcross is but a speck in the vast territory in which it is situated. There is frost nearly every month of the year, even though at times in summer the thermometer rises as high as eighty degrees. The summers are short and for most of the year winter holds the land in a stern and icebound grip. Even in spring, after the snow has disappeared, the ground is so hard that cannot drive a stake. Before the discovery of gold in 1896 this region was almost uninhabited. Explorers occasionally found their way along its broad rivers or trekked over its rolling hills, eking out a diet of canned salmon and kippered herring and bacon, with squaw berries picked on the route, and rabbits and ptarmigan, to be found in plenty. All that has been changed, for the White Pass and Yukon Railroad has been built, and Carcross lies upon its route, about two hundred miles southwest of Dawson. "Chooutla" means "Laughing Water" in the Indian dialect, and refers to the clear and pellucid stream near the school, aptly named because of the beauty of its surroundings. These boys and girls, sitting so sedately in the bright sunshine, and regarding us with so much interest, might also be thought children of our own land, so

The pleasant spot before us is the "old swimmin' hole," more attractive in every way than many a muddy one in which the small boys of our own country cool themselves on hot days. What a charming place for a swim, this lovely body of water bordered by spreading shrubs and tall spruce! There is nothing in the scene to suggest that this clear and smiling sheet of water lies in one of the far north section of the North American continent. Within a short distance, as distance is reckoned in that part of the globe, lies the Klondike mining region, eight hundred square miles in extent, with its once-famous Eldorado and Bonanza Creeks, from which millions in gold have been taken, and along the banks of which lie the bones of scores and hundreds of men who perished in the terrible winters. In this region the summers, in direct contrast to the winters, are short and hot , and on days like this, when all nature smiles, the Indian boys of this small school love to paddle in this smiling water. The small blocks of wood which some of them have in their hands are used as aids in swimming, as a sort of paddle, for to the Indian mind paddles suggest progress on the water, and they think that as paddles propel their canoes they also help to propel their bodies through the water. The Chooutla School,

The latter are holes dug in the ground, sometimes as deep as six feet, and covered with stones and brush to prevent wild animals from digging up the provisions. The sense of smell is so keenly developed in wild animals that the traveler can hardly hope to prevent them from discovering where the provisions are hidden, even though they be several feet under ground. So he covers the cache with the largest stones and logs that can be obtained, then puts some kind of a landmark so that he or his partners can find the spot when they again pass that way. In the arctic regions provision caches are covered by mounds of rock and marked by a landmark so large and so prominent that it can be descried from a distance. The cache before us is more like the meat houses built by farmers in many parts of our country for the storage of hams and other provisions. The large plant which has grown so luxuriously immediately in the foreground is rhubarb, a native of temperate and cold climates. In this country the plant is grown as food, but in some parts of Europe people grow it merely for the leaves, as ornamental shrubbery. 78/69 #107	1326	Street on Ocean Front, Juneau City, Alaska [Streetscape erected high above beach. Reverse reads "No. 1326 STREET ON OCEAN FRONT, JUNEAU CITY, ALASKA. Looks a little different from Broadway or Michigan Avenue, doesn't it? But the location of Juneau is such that it will probably remain an important place as an outfitting station for miners, and it has a considerable trade in Alaskan furs, such as sea-otter, otter, seal, beaver, bear, muskrat, fox, etc. Here you may also buy one of the famous Chilkat blankets, made of the hair of the mountain goat and colored with native dyes, but a genuine article costs from $60.00 to $100.00, and most of those offered for sale are made of sheep's wool and stained with aniline dyes. A little north of Juneau is a village for the Auk Indians, very primitive, very dirty and very curious. There is a native cemetery with queer little huts containing the cremated remains and personal effects of the deceased. From Juneau to Silver Bow Mines it is but three and one-half miles, and the road is a good one, leading through the highly picturesque canon of the Gold Creek. The famous Treadwell Gold Mine is on Douglas Island, nearly opposite Juneau. It is close to the wharf. This mine has one of the largest quartz-crushing mills in the world, employing 900 stamps.".] - [ca. 1900-ca. 1920].

Topographically the Klondike region must be described as a high plateau, intersected by a large number of deep, wide valleys crossing each other in all directions. The amount of snow that falls here during the long winters is enormous, and when it melts in summer, the waters rushing along their courses tear deep gashes into the soil. There are no high peaks or ridges. The highest point above the level of the plateau is only about 400 feet, being 3,700 feet above the level of the sea. The woods consist of white and black pine, a few kinds of poplar and birches; there are no spruces or firs. White pine is found in large quantities and is mostly used for building purposes. Sawmills have been erected and get their material from the Klondike valley mostly or from the islands in the Yukon River. Bennett is one of the many mining camps, grown up like mushrooms over night and likely to disappear again from the face of the earth soon as the gold in the neighborhood shall have been exhausted."] - [ca. 1900-ca. 1905].

All the creeks in the Klondike are auriferous, and one after the other was found in some place or other to yield the precious metal in great quantities. One after the other became the "latest discovery," to which from all the other parts of the Klondike larger numbers of people flocked who had not yet made a lucky strike. The time for such "discoveries" is nearly over, however, and only a rational and systematic method of mining can succeed henceforth. The engineer has come, and claims that were supposed to be worked out are proving productive and the Canadian government has sent in several diamond drills with competent experts to make explorations and to discover whether any claims is likely to pay for the introduction of quartz-crushing machinery. Dawson City has passed out the pioneer stage and now has many buildings that would do credit to any city of its size in the United States or Canada. It has telephones, electric light, waterworks and good hotels. Skagway and White Horse too have made considerable advance in the securing of comforts of civilized life."] - [ca. 1900-ca. 1920].

Thousands upon thousands of people have gone there to grow rich and hundreds have returned with gold enough to live upon their incomes, and still the Klondike is yielding enormous quantities of the precious metal every year. Only the gold is no longer to be scooped up from the bottom of Bonanza Creek or Eldorado Creek, but societies with large capital and good mining engineers can still reap enormous harvests throughout this region. According to an official estimation by the Geological Survey of Canada, the gold fields of the Klondike extend over nearly 2,000 square miles, and there is still gold to the amount of about $100,000,000 waiting to be taken. The gold district is bounded by the Yukon in the west, by the Klondike in the north, by Flat Creek in the east and by Indian River in the south. All the rivers and creeks contain gold, and many a small creek has not even been examined."] - 1905. - Photographer: T.W. Ingersoll.
